To my dear readers

If you remember, I wrote about the grief of a true sadist in my first book and it was only a story about Sarasa and Kazunari. I'm terribly sorry. When Haruki appeared in the second book, I could finally grasp where this story was going.
I noticed in volume 2 that the two of them weren't supposed to be just two, but I didn't know if I could work out said characters to their full potential in three volumes.
That sucks.
It's plenty stupid if the author notices such things only in the second volume.

I think everyone has a right to strive for happiness.
There are times when "being your true self" is proclaimed as an important virtue, however, I think it's an essential requirement to acquire the strength to control the dangerous side of your own personality in order to achieve happiness.
I may say that but I'm the same as Sarasa. I'm the type to rely on others to cope with my dangerous side.
Ah, but don't worry, I'm not a sadist.

So that you, who read my books, don't influence the values of others, just think of catching your own happiness.
But I pray that you will meet this indispensable person to become happy, maybe with a little push from this work.
Thank you very much.

Aaah, I wrote such lofty things, all for nothing...
